'This excellent book presents outstanding research on a wide range of major issues for the Chinese economy – domestically, in an Asian regional context, and because China is so important, globally. The combination of range, depth, quality, and policy judgment is beyond the scope of any one author. I commend the editors for assembling so many outstanding scholars for their comprehensive yet detailed studies.'

Hugh T. Patrick, Director, Center on Japanese Economy and Business,
Columbia Business School

The rise of Asia, and China specifically, is the single most important force reshaping the world economy at the beginning of the 21st century. From a low of 20 per cent in 1950, Asia's share of global GDP has now risen to 33 per cent and will exceed 40 per cent within a generation if current forecasts are realized. Asia's growing weight in the world economy is elevating it to a central position in global economic and financial affairs. The potential global impact of this astonishing growth is far reaching, from oil markets and the environment to a reshaping of trade relations in the current multilateral system dominated by the WTO.

This collection of original essays written by leading economists explores the likely impact of the rapid growth in the East Asian economies, and in particular China, on the world economy in the coming decades and the consequent challenges for the development of trade, macroeconomic, and environmental policy.
